WE WON!

BNP victory in East End stuns the Establishment

AN EARTHQUAKE shook Britain's political Establishment on Thursday the 16th of September, when the first ever British National Party candidate was elected to serve the Millwall ward of Tower Hamlets Borough Council. It was a close result, but BNP candidate Derek Beackon won, and is now the first serving councillor for the British National Party.

This election was the toughest battle yet faced by the BNP, but we came through it with flying colours. We won despite every conceivable obstacle and dirty trick being used against us, from illegal smear leaflets, media disinformation, intimidation from the authorities and a vicious physical assault against Derek Beackon himself. The Liberals repeated last year's shabby trick of playing the 'race card', by trying to pretend that they were against immigration. The trick failed, as local whites had heard it all before, and this time were not taken in.

It was about two months before the election when BNP canvassers first realised that the Party might have a chance of winning Millwall. Support from local whites was running very high at around fifty per cent, and even after discounting the ten to fifteen per cent immigrant vote, this put the BNP in the running for a chance of winning the seat. In the event, this is exactly what happened, with Derek Beackon gaining 1,480 votes. The BNP's total share of the vote was thirty-four per cent, but its share of the white vote was closer to fifty per cent, as Labour managed to mobilise the vast majority of the ten to fifteen per cent immigrant population of the borough to vote against us. The turnout for the election was unusually high, at forty-four per cent, compared with an average of thirty-three per cent.

The Millwall victory is an enormous psychological victory for the British National Party, and a massive blow against the enemies of Britain. For the first time, we have shattered the myth of Establishment invincibility. From now on, there can be no more excuses about the BNP being a 'wasted vote'.

Millwall is just the beginning. The British National Party will soon be enjoying even greater electoral successes.

Controlled press can no longer ignore BNP

"DEREK BEACKON has thrown a hand grenade into British politics" shrieked the Daily Mail. "Supporters of the BNP are pigs" snarled the Daily Telegraph.

There's no doubt about it — the Government's official peers were not at all pleased by the British National Party's election victory. The hysteria generated on television news programmes was more than matched by the front page headlines streaming from every national newspaper in the land. The official Media hate machine has got, but they can no longer pretend we don't exist.

It is almost obvious that we can expect an avalanche of unbelievable horror 'racist under the bed' type stories, from the press. But Millwall proves the public are increasingly going wise to this sort of hogwash.

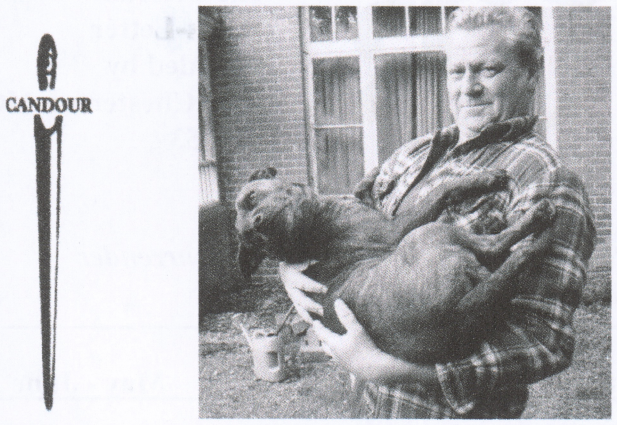
29 Years On a Great British Icon Stands Beside a Red Telephone Box

Editorial: Colin Todd



Welcome to #880

"...eighty percent of the movement's members are first class, honest to God, British patriots. Ten percent are drifters who will go with the tide, five per cent place personal ambition above all else, three percent are totally unable to distinguish between good and bad faith, two per cent are really evil men..."

So wrote A.K. Chesterton in 1971 when Policy Director of the then National Front..

Steve Smith uses this quote of AK's at the end of Part 4 of his East London Rights for Whites 1990-94 concluding article in this issue.

It is vital that we keep AK's words very much in mind as we, you and I, continue the work of regaining as many of the lost eighty percent as possible and at the same time attract younger generations of our folk to the movement.

The toxic or useless twenty percent will be kept away. If we concentrate and work together.

Candour is, and next year will have been for 70 Years, a key part of British racial nationalism. Note racial nationalism. Not sell out 'civic' nationalism or diesoft Tory nonsense.

I do dream of a beautiful, free, Europe of 100 Flags. Ours among them. First let us tend our own garden.

Support Candour and we will continue to grow and play our part

IT IS LESS THAN A YEAR since the ignominious scuttle of 'allied' forces from Afghanistan. (It feels much longer to me). The last US military planes left the airport at 11.59PM Kabul time on 30 August 2021. A full minute before the "Get out of town and don't show your face around here again" ultimatum of the undefeated mountain tribesmen expired.

Less than a year after that debacle we find ourselves in ALL BUT NAME at war with Russia. A war using proxies. British and American Special Forces and 'military advisors' are on the ground now in Ukraine stoking the fires. (As are the ever lying BBC).

The same 'advisors' from West Point, Sandhurst and Tel Aviv who were so recently in Afghanistan are now stirring the pot in Ukraine. Misguiding the Ukranian armed forces and the duped foreign volunteers.

All we can do here is to keep on going and not allow ourselves to be distracted.

A Question Answered?
Why does Ukraine, with a Jewish President, have the Azov 'Nazi' Battalions?

Since the end of WWII the entire Ukranian 'nationalist' leadership has been on the payroll of the CIA and to a lesser extent that of MI6. Fact. Before that they were on the German payroll. Fact.

The 'nazi' scenario is designed to encourage the mass recruitment of white wannabee 'nationalist' warriors into outfits being run and controlled by the very characters they should be fighting against TO FREE EUROPE!

Thus are many of the potential 'troublemakers' and true European resistance subverted to do their dirty work and as a bonus they may get their heads blown off. Naturally it is also intended to really wind the Russians up.

A WIN - WIN for someone...

The usual suspects of course.

Note the MSM/BBC support of foreign volunteers for the Ukranian front line and the 'blind eye' to the 'nazi story'. Add the Foreign Office support for those 'Brits' taken prisoner by the Russians with the ludicrous fake outrage that such half wits may have received a slap or two from the Russian soldiers they were moments before trying to kill or maim. Maybe they already had...

I would suggest the fact that they were taken prisoner at all gives a lie to much of the MSM fake news from the conflict.

Zelensky Says He wants Ukraine to Become a 'Big Israel'

Al Jazeera

https://www.aljazeera.com/news/2022/4/5/zelensky.y-says-wants-ukraine-to-become-a-big-israel

Ukranian President Volodymyr Zelensky has said he wants his country to become a "'big Israel' with its own face" after the Russian invasion ends, stressing that security would likely be the main issue in Ukraine during the post-war period. In comments to local media posted on the president's official website on Tuesday, Zelensky stressed that his vision for Ukraine's post-conflictfuture included having armed forces in "all institutions, supermarkets, cinemas, there will be people with weapons". In Israel, images of armed civilians, settlers and soldiers are commonplace, and the government invokes security frequently. Zelensky, who is Jewish, has on several occasions stressed the importance of maintaining close ties with Israel, which he hailed as a model for Ukraine.

From D. DeCamp - Antiwar.com on the same theme

Zelensky said. "We will become a 'big Israel' with its own face." The Ukranian leader said he expects society to be highly militarized... Zelensky insisted that such measures wouldn't threaten democracy and wouldn't turn Ukraine into an authoritanian state... However, since the war started, Zelensky has prohibited military-age males from leaving Ukraine, banned 11 opposition political parties, and nationalized the media.

"Something Big Happened Last Night..."

Friday 17th September 1993. The morning after the Millwall by-election. Victorious BNP by-election. A handful of us including new Tower Hamlets Councillor Derek Beackon, were still at a colleague's flat, recovering from a night of moderate celebration and mild hangovers. At last, it had finally sunk in with us. We had won the council by-election. We, just at that moment realised how huge a political event last night's victory was! Not merely a big news item for the weekend and the following week but something phenomenal that would become a regular, major news item till the spring elections, the following May. At the moment of victory it was THE news item in Britain and mentioned on numerous foreign news media in other parts of the world.

We watched some TV clips to see the media's coverage of our success. Non-stop. Afterwards, four of us drove to Derek's flat in Stepney so he could collect some things. Just prior to leaving the phone rang, it was John Tyndall. He congratulated Derek for his electoral victory and praised the efforts of our Tower Hamlets team. John Tyndall, after spending most of the 1980s in the political wilderness, probably felt vindicated forming the BNP in 1982. So in a way it was a personal triumph for him as well.

When we arrived at Derek's flat there was a gaggle of men, all with large cameras, outside the entrance to the buildings where he lived. They were photo-journalists from national newspapers or freelance photographers. They must have got there early. They knew the BNP was a story (and photo opportunity) of massive public interest.

As we got out of the car and approached the building's entrance, about twenty flashbulbs on various cameras clicked into action. They took as many snaps as possible. This was the 90s. No mobile phone photography. It was initially quite overwhelming. Mixed amongst the frantic photographers were some journalists who requested comments from us and interviews with Derek. We firmly declined. Time for that later. We helped Derek get some personal items, then went to the home of another BNP member, in order to ascertain the full effects of the Millwall election result on the national television media.

We sat down in our colleague's front room and watched the TV. As we flicked from channel to channel we now fully realised that last night's victory seemed, in parts, to be the only news item!

Politicians' contempt for Millwall electors & real British Democracy

Sometimes in the gambling world, a lucky punter will visit a casino or a racecourse and without using any underhand or fraudulent methods win a small fortune. A few casino owners or bookmakers will try to prevent said punter collecting his lawful winnings. They will also be privately (and publicly) outraged that such an individual had the temerity to actually beat them fair and square at their own game!

Hence the reaction of Britain's Establishment politicians and the MSM. Universal condemnation and a great deal of their poison, vitriol and lies was based on the assumption that people like us were NOT meant to win elections. Winning elections should only be allowed for the disciples and puppets of Globalist, Multi-Cultural Plutocracy.

Let us examine some of the comments of Britain's leading political figures from that time, September 1993.

Prime Minister John Major- "A*n unfortunate result and there was no place in our society for those sort of policies*".

Actually quite mild compared to others. Typical, bland comment from the grey man of '90s British politics. Leader of the opposition and Labour leader John Smith also condemned the result in similar mild language. The ridiculous Paddy Ashdown, Lib Dems leader, announced an enquiry into Tower Hamlets Lib Dems alleged 'racist' leaflets. He attacked the BNP describing the result as "very, very bad news" but was also clearly embarrassed by the antics of the Lib Dems in east London. Interesting. The leaders of the three main parties, as expected, attacked the BNP but were also holding back a little. Real, open vehemence came from others.

The Archbishop of Canterbury: "Evil policies undermine the peace and stability of democracy".

-Home Secretary Michael Howard: " I deplore the election of any candidate who does not recognise that all sections of our community have equal rights under the law".

Howard also resisted demands (from where?) for the BNP to be banned saying :"..it would be bad for democracy". Thanks.. The BNP was also condemned by Metropolitan Police Commissioner Paul Condon. Eh? I thought senior civil servants were supposed to keep their political opinions to themselves. Are they not meant to be fair, unbiased and neutral? Publicly anyway.

Now this gem from Tory minister John Gummer: "A thoroughly nasty party, not part of the normal democratic life – not a party that honest or responsible people can support. I very, very much deplore the fact that people voted for it". Please take note Cockney peasants especially the 1,480 who voted BNP; you are not allowed to peacefully, legitimately, vote for your own tribal interests regarding housing and immigration!

Labour's Jack Straw described the result as "tragic" but concentrated his fire on the Tower Hamlets Lib Dems and their naughty leaflets. Tower Hamlets Lib Dem leader described the result as "shameful". Lib Dem Simon Hughes when interviewed on TV used the word regret more than three times when asked about the result. I think it was a kind of apology for the local leaflets again. He also said that:"True democracy will only be restored when the BNP are defeated in the May elections and that man (ie. Derek) is removed from public office". Think about that last statement.

As noted before the reaction to the BNP's singular election victory in one ward amongst (then) 19,000 wards in England was astonishing. The MSM could have played it down. Freak result. Due to local housing policy. A one-off that won't be repeated. Irrelevant. They didn't though, the result triggered a collective, hysterical reaction from them. A mad spasm of journalistic and broadcaster rage. The reason? Pure fear. The political prostitutes and media marionettes whose ultimate loyalty/subservience is to Globalist forces, greater than national governments, had instinctively recognised a real threat to the system. Not so much the election of just one councillor but official, public approval (albeit in one London district) of an ideology, Racial-Nationalism, that if it spread through Britain and the West would turn upside down the post-1945 world of Liberal-Cosmopolitan-Internationalism. It sent a real chill through Britain's political Establishment.

"So the result stands"

One final media moment worth mentioning on the morning after BNP victory was from ITN Live, around 8am. A dialogue between newscaster John Suchet and on the spot reporter Colin Baker. The latter looked aghast at our election win. Firstly, he pointed out that Tower Hamlets had the highest rates of racial attacks in the country! I would love to examine the actual methods of compiling such figures! Needless to say these were (apparently) only attacks on non-white ethnic minorities! Then he went into the statistics from election night.

His 'report': "Only 4,371 bothered to vote, BNP vote less than 1,500, only won by 7 votes, less than 44% turnout (high for local elections! SS). If people wanted change they could have stood as independents". Such objective reporting. We won and the media couldn't accept it. After further negative commentary, Baker (with grim visage) finished his 'report' with these words, "so the result stands". Mm. Maybe he thought Tower Hamlets council should cancel the election outcome if it made people unhappy!

Breaking Through an Invisible Force Field

Apart from the post-war election of three Nationalist councillors in the 1970s – to minor organisations (N.I.P. & N.P.) the premier Nationalist party had never broken through a seemingly invisible barrier and actually elected someone. Although the NF did come very close in the 70s. The three seats won by the aforementioned splinter groups hardly created much attention at the time. Maybe the System assumed that these micro-Nationalist groups that had created these electoral gains, a mere three seats, could be safely ignored. The results were 'probably a fluke in each case' and, moreover, such groups seriously lacked the potential to become mass movements. Unlikely that these parties would attain critical mass. They could be disregarded.

The National Front of the 1970s was a nascent mass movement, then, often described (by opponents) as a growing and serious threat. The old NF created shock, horror and outrage in the chambers of political power, without actually getting anyone elected. The BNP of 1993, a reorganised offshoot of the original NF, though at this time nowhere near as big as the former party, had a similar political trajectory. Just like the NF it could potentially grow very quickly. Thus the real political fear factor for the British Establishment.

Enjoyable & Noteworthy Highlights

During this brief, halcyon period for the old (Tyndall) led BNP there are a number of memories that stand out from autumn 1993.

1. The morning immediately after Derek Beackon's election, some members of the Unison trade union staged a half day walkout from municipal buildings. Led by their rep, Derek Relph. The walk out was in 'protest' at a legal election result by a bona fide political party. Again, as I have noted before in these articles, civil servants are supposed to be politically neutral keeping their beliefs to themselves. Political opinions private. Council workers are local civil servants. Preposterous that they could deliberately avoid work for four hours because they disapproved of a particular election result!

They could have restrained themselves from political protest, aware that the BNP had only a tenuous grip on one council seat and that the London Labour party (ably assisted by MSM) would use, next May, overwhelming numerical force and resources to get the seat back. Which they did. Hence the title of this article. They could have ignored us, but no,the schizoid nature of the left combined with political reaction meant they had to protest. They simply couldn't help themselves.

2. Newspaper headlines. In the two days after polling there were all manner of hostile and hysterical newspaper headlines. Britain's biggest circulation paper, The Sun (a tabloid) had two front pages of great interest.

Day 1:"Racist Party Wins First Seat". Day 2:The late, black boxer Gary Mason suggests blacks should flee east London.

The now defunct Today newspaper had a headline that featured an obscure photograph of Derek Beackon raising his hand in the air (could have been any kind of gesture!) and these words:"Sieg Heil, and now he's a British councillor".

The Daily Mail:"Derek Beackon has thrown a hand grenade into British politics". If the interested reader has the time and energy, please examine the large volume of media headlines and comments from one week in September 1993 (16th onwards) plus the comments of politicians as well, some of which I've already included in this piece. An entirely seperate article could be written about BNP media coverage during this period.

The talented (and brave) recently appointed BNP Press Officer, Mike Newland, who performed well in radio interviews and always provided sound advice and assistance for Councillor Derek Beackon.

4. The thousands of letters sent to BNP head office and the Tower Hamlets branch P.O. Box. Amongst the flood of supportive, positive mail we received they included hundreds of membership renewals, new members and enquiries plus donations. Head Office had to drastically expand its administrative affairs afterwards.

Last Days at Brick Lane...

"Bravery is not the absence of fear but the subordination of it"
British General Sir Richard Adam – 1943

The euphoria we all felt in the BNP for two days after polling night was tempered by events at Brick Lane market, Bethnal Green, east London on the Sunday (19th) just after. The previous Sunday (just prior to the election) there had been the usual Nationalist presence at Brick Lane street market selling our literature. A group of around 100 reds turned up on the opposite side of the road. For an hour or so there was mutual chanting and exchange of insults between the two groups. The day ended peacefully. No trouble. Sunday 19th, next week was very different. The reds from a multitude of groups had put together a mob of 500+ and arrived early and occupied the corner of Brick Lane market where we normally stood.

Minimal police numbers despite the numbers on the streets (deliberate?). A small contingent of BNP activists, around 20 in number arrived and stood on the opposite corner facing the left-wing mob. After a certain amount of political chanting (both sides using megaphones) they suddenly came across the road and started attacking our people. Vastly outnumbered, our people put up a spirited resistance but appeared to be overwhelmed, until the police restored order. Then, a mini-bus of Nationalists turned up, increasing our numbers to around 40 but still easily outnumbered by the opposition by a factor of 10-1 plus.

The reds launched a final attack, en masse, from all sides with the police hardly responding. Again, after some valiant resistance our people had to retreat from the vicinity of Brick Lane. London Tonight reporter, Simon Harris, who was there reporting on these events (with other TV media) and featured on the 6pm regional TV bulletin, made a telling and honest comment saying:"...to be fair the BNP were heavily, massively outnumbered".

"Get Beackon..."

This Sunday of strife wasn't finished yet. The BNP and kindred Nationalists had managed to regroup at the other end of Bethnal Green Road, East London occupying two or three pubs. Our numbers were now about the 100 mark. The reds didn't bother us again that day but now there were greater dangers. Much, much greater. As I noted at the end of part 3 in this series of 'Rights for Whites' articles the System was terrified by our victory on the Isle of Dogs. Inevitably they would start to oppress us in various ways. Media lies and red street demonstrations are one thing but the Establishment are something else!

The police despite using a limited number of officers for operating at Brick Lane market suddenly increased in number. Some uniformed, some plain clothes, others riot squad variety.

They were mainly amassed in and around Bethnal Green police station on the main road but near to the pub most of us were using. The bulk of our people were inside it. At some point, early in the afternoon, a couple walked past our group. The couple comprised a white woman and a black man. The woman we later discovered was the daughter of one of the leaders of the left-wing anarchist group Class War. The woman instantly recognised who we were and started shouting abuse at close range to a crowd of Nationalists. Her companion the black man was trying to pull her away and quickly move on. An altercation took place, the woman was assaulted, the black man received an injury to his face from a pint glass – to this day no one knows who was responsible for these actions. It would have been better to have ignored the rantings of the woman. Come to think of it, it would have been a good idea to have completely avoided Brick Lane altogether that day. After all, we had politically moved to another level. We had finally proved we were capable of winning elections.

Unfortunately, this incident gave the police, nearby, an opportunity (some of them had wanted) the excuse to arrest not just some BNP activists or random Nationalist but leading and/or prominent BNP individuals! As they swarmed across the road, virtually surrounding the pub where the incident took place, numerous Nationalists heard this message on a police radio - "Get Beackon, Get Beackon". Derek Beackon was fortunately out of sight, somewhere in the pub but the police intent was clear – arrest the new BNP Councillor and charge (frame?) him with a serious assault with a possible racial aspect. What a media feast that would have been for our enemies plus if detained in custody, on remand for months, he wouldn't have been able to attend any council business, a lethal blow to our political credibility!

Regardless of lack of evidence and no concept of justice they wanted to arrest our man who had only been a Councillor for two days! The political advantages to the System were obvious. No doubt that whoever was behind this was either an over zealous police officer or a malevolent Home Office official. The police eventually arrested four people. Simon Biggs, Steve O'Shea, Paul Steele and a very satisfactory political prize – Richard Edmonds! Richard was actually trying to calm things down outside the pub when the anarchist woman was shouting abuse. Those of us who knew Richard understood he was not a man of violence. The police arrested him purely because of who he was, a senior BNP organiser, a familiar face in east London, tall in height he stood out.

Despite the mass red organised street violence that day and although the police arrested a handful of reds , the police's main interest at that point seems to have been a desire to apprehend known BNP characters.

Even though the facts surrounding the assault incident were muddled and confused all four men were convicted the following summer. Simon Biggs got 4 ½ years, Steve O'Shea 12 months, Paul Steele had served 3 months on remand same as Richard. The latter two were released after the court case. Richard was refused bail until December 9th even though there was zero evidence against him and he wasn't a threat to the public. The whole affair was shoddy, dubious 'justice' obviously politically motivated.

We referred to them at the time as the 'Brick Lane Four'. It was apparent what the System was doing regarding Richard Edmonds. He was one of the most senior BNP members, had played a crucial, pivotal role in Nationalist activity in east London. Therefore incarcerting him for a few months would deprive the party of a key figure in the frantic months after the election. Plus he ran the party bookshop in Welling. A political arrest, detention and conviction.

More Media Frenzy

In late September 1993 the BBC's Newsnight programme organised a discussion about the Millwall election and its aftermath. Hosted by Peter Snow with the panel consisting of the usual selection from the old parties. There was a small audience who were asked questions and made their own points as well. In that audience were two Islanders, a father and his daughter, BNP voters. Both of these ordinary White Working-Class individuals acquitted themselves with quiet dignity. Also in the audience were two Asian 'activists' though to be fair they didn't scold the Whites who voted BNP, they blamed the council and lack of housing.

A local Tower Hamlets housing officer (who seemed visibly uncomfortable) reiterated the essence of the Borough's housing policy (probably the same almost everywhere) that regarding housing allocation 'Need' was the paramount aspect. Never any real consideration for longevity on council list, health, domestic problems, local connections etc. A large, expanding family equalled a family size home. The 'Need' policy usually meant Whites missed out on family housing hence the eventual, mass White exodus from Tower Hamlets and east London generally.

Interestingly the housing officer mentioned the fact that due to the exponential increase in the Bangladeshi Asian population in the west of the borough Tower Hamlets council had no choice but to spread families out all over the borough! Thus creating a family size housing shortage everyhere including Isle of Dogs. The families had to be spread out due to 'overcrowding'. I am sure the reader can work out the logistics of this...

It was a rather sedate political programme. The stand out feature was a Tory housing minister George Young. To get a flavour of this creature he once commented when asked about the homeless: "that they were the sort of people you step over when you've just come out of the opera". So much for 'Noblesse Oblige' then!

The source of Young's ire was the two Islanders, father and daughter, open BNP voters. Young informed them that no matter what the issue was with housing they must not under any circumstances vote for the BNP. No, no, no you mustn't. I dare say this suggestion applies to all White Working-Class people generally. Regardless of your grievances you mustn't vote for them.

Young mentioned greater investment in housing in the inner-cities but this was meaningless because of the 'Need' policy White families frequently missed out on council housing. Young with all the decaying arrogance of a liberal patrician offered no solution to the Island's housing problem.

It would take an honest council policy to come up with a genuinely fair housing policy based on all manner of factors. It would take courage as well because to go against the large families in 'Need' would be considered racist!

Public finances and resources will in the very near future find it impossible to provide endless housing for a certain type of very large family. It is unsustainable.

Vindification for the BNP's arguments and the fury of the Islanders came from an unlikely source. It was a small news feature but printed in Britain's then biggest selling Sunday newspaper: The News of the World. The paper no longer exists. In the feature, two journalists, one White, one Asian, with a similar tactical arrangement both approached Tower Hamlets council at the same time. They (with dependents) declared themselves as homeless and in need of immediate help. They contacted Tower Hamlets 'Homeless Unit'. If the interested reader wants to read this article it was published on Sunday 26th September 1993. The outcome of the under cover investigation was that the Asian reporter posing as a refugee received instant assistance. The White reporter was told to go back to the original London borough he came from and seek help there! 'Need' triumphs again.

No place at the top of the table

Another BBC 'debate' at this time showed the real intolerance of multi-racial liberalism. A programme called 'After Millwall' was aired. Presenter was Nick Ross. The format was standard. Political panel at the front, audience facing them. In the audience were two good ladies from the Island. Middle-aged BNP voters and they emphatically explained why! One of the women said, using a nice basic analogy: "...regarding the Island and the housing crisis, its like drowning at sea. Three ships passed by, Labour, Liberal, Tory. You ask for help. They sail on ignoring you. Then the BNP arrive, they offer a hand, we'll help you they say, so you take their hand... what else are we supposed to do?".

One big problem, for us, with the 'After Millwall' programme was the top table seating arrangements. The issue was the invited Establishment politicians who were quite happy to sit at the top table providing the BNP didn't! The BBC had invited Derek Beackon and John Tyndall. The System politicians refused to sit next to the BNP. The three MPs were, Peter Bottomley (Con), Alex Carlile (LD), Keith Vaz! (Lab). All three, fine 'patriots'! The BBC suggested Derek and JT sat in the audience. We refused this. After all we were the subject of interest. Hence the programme. We should sit at the front handling questions. The BBC's intention was obvious.

Not only would JT and Derek be degraded by being put into the middle of the audience but they would probably be abused by deliberately planted, hostile, members of the audience as well as attacks from the politicians' panel. Sensing a trap we refused to appear. BBC presenter Nick Ross said the BNP were "childish" for objecting to the seating arrangements but they wanted to set us up for public humiliation. Thus our refusal.

Thank you Islanders

One regular, by now, standard tactic we had developed, was after a successful election campaign, was to produce and distribute in a council ward a 'Thank You' leaflet to all our voters/supporters who lived there. It maintained enthusiasm for the party and displayed respect for those who shared our aims. The leaflet was satisfactorily distributed but not after some police disruption the first time we wanted to do this.

Exactly one week after the Brick Lane battle with the reds, 80+ Nationalists met at Mile End underground station, east London. The purpose was the distribution of the leaflet. A few Nationalists activists wanted to go back to Brick Lane market and re-occupy our old literature sales spot. This would have been foolish. The Anti-Nazi League and assorted red groups were still in that area. Regardless of the numbers we could have assembled, conflict would have ensued and we would have more patriots arrested and probably jailed.

Besides we had moved on from the lower regions of the political pyramid. We didn't need that kind of street activity anymore. Police intelligence had been aware of the activists' group meeting at the station, so they (the police) took swift and drastic action. Out of the 80+ Nationalists standing outside the station 57 were arrested and put into those special police vans. The large vehicles that contained inside a hive of tiny, uncomfortable minature cells. Thus the bulk of our activists had been detained, taken out of circulation for a few hours then released without charge. This was the same tactic used on the Nationalists who wanted to oppose the IRA march in London in January that year.

After this event, party Chairman, John Tyndall, had a dialogue with one of the main police commanders in the east London region D.A.C. Taylor. JT asked why the activists had been detained and without charge. D.A.C Taylor said it was a necessary, preventative measure. John Tyndall then asked why such methods didn't apply to the Anti-Nazi League. Taylor didn't give a reply to this question. Taylor's response was that the 'temporary detention' of the BNP activists was necessary because police intelligence inidicated a secret BNP plan(?) to take back the corner of Brick Lane market.

It could be argued that despite JT's robust defence of our people, senior police officer Taylor may have had a potentially valid point and he was just an old style policeman trying to maintain public order.

Then the officer made a comment at the end of the dialogue, that Tyndall printed in Spearhead magazine. The policeman's comment was this:"...your people are not wanted in that area...". What? Not wanted! A recently elected councillor, 1,480 votes in one council ward. Prior to the election win we had obtained good votes (previously) in Millwall (20%) and in wards elsewhere in the borough. The General Election '92 saw 2,417 votes across Tower Hamlets. Marches and public meetings attended by large numbers of an interested and sympathetic public. We had created a serious political power base in the area for the last 2 years. Not wanted. Ridiculous.

Around this time, say late-80s/early 90s certain public servants stopped being, publicly, politically neutral and impartial. In the case of police officers, as powerful members of the executive, they started to defile their position by making political pronouncements. If they want to be political they should resign and stand for election. Though I suspect at this particular time (Autumn 1993) the Metropolitan Police would have been under pressure from the Home Office to harass and obstruct the BNP. They certainly proved that when they closed down our social/party on election night, one hour after Derek Beackon was elected!

In my view the beginning of openly political police officers started, roughly in this era.

Perhaps D.A.C Taylor (Met Police) should have read the local paper for Tower Hamlets, the East London Advertiser, a few weeks later and revised his opinion of us not being wanted in Tower Hamlets. The East London Advertiser, was (then) a decent, objective newsworthy local publication for this one east London borough. It would cover a range of local news issues .

The coverage of the BNP since 1990 had been balanced. Objective, No complaints from us.

After victory at Millwall, the East London Advertiser, organised a telephone poll with a simple direct question –

DO YOU THINK IT IS RIGHT THAT A BNP CANDIDATE HAS BEEN ELECTED TO TOWER HAMLET'S COUNCIL? - YES or NO.

The total number of phone votes was 4,849. Remember this local paper was basically read by the people of one borough, Tower Hamlets. 4,849 votes is a lot of interested people taking part in a phone poll with one local newspaper.

The YES vote was 3,963 (81.7%). The NO vote was 886 (18.3%). This showed the real strength of our political support in east London and our growing popularity created by the election win on the Island. "..your people are not wanted by the community in that area..". An absurd statement and one clearly at odds with facts and reality!

Death of a Nationalist Hero

Seven days after Derek's election as councillor, Ian Stuart, stalwart Nationalist activist and lead singer of skinhead band Skrewdriver, was fatally injured in a car accident. He was hospitalised on the 23rd September but died of his terrible injuries the following day.

I only met (and spoke) with him a few times (when we were both in the NF, mid-1980s). He was a gutsy, dedicated, brave Nationalist who recruited many good young people through Blood & Honour and the skinhead music scene. It was a very bad blow and a great loss to the Nationalist movement only a week after our political success.

The Qualities of Derek Beackon

Derek Beackon was an ordinary middle-aged man from Stepney, east London. Left school at fifteen, various blue-collar jobs, mainly worked driving lorries and other goods vehicles. His state education was standard.

Derek was a very well read man. Erudite. Even now (2022) he possesses hundreds of books on all manner of subjects. Nothing wrong with knowledge acquired through self-learning. We could have elected Jonathan Bowden or Andrew Brons, there would have still been heavy media critique as well as all the usual press abuse. The message of genuine Nationalism created the fear amongst broadcasters and journalists.

Derek was/is a man of political integrity (ideologically) and unquestioned political courage.

In the 29 years since the Millwall election hundreds of newspaper articles and sections of hostile anti-Nationalists books have given Derek scant regard for his work as an Isle of Dogs councillor. He is always stereotyped; White Working-Class, Cockney bigot, thug? None of his media detractors possess even 1% of his personal courage, none of them could have endured his pressurised tenure as a BNP councillor. He stood for Race & Nation.

Shortly after this Derek was on the front page of the local paper (ELA) after he offered help to one of his constituents, an asthmatic lady who was being threatened with eviction by bailiffs from her Isle of Dogs home. Our BNP Councillor never claimed or attempted to pretend that he was an Oxbridge intellectual or skilful political 'player' but compare his short period in elected public office to the legions of corrupt, useless, old party councillors who are regularly convicted of all manner of criminal offences!

In comparision Derek Beackon was several leagues higher than the ignoble, ideological perverts of Labour, Lib Dems and the Tories. He continued his brave, solo work on behalf of Islanders until he lost his seat.

'Brick by Brick'

"It's our job to wipe the BNP off the streets on October 16th. We'll show them how serious we are, we plan to tear down their HQ brick by brick. Just like the Germans did with the Berlin Wall." Julie Waterson, Anti-Nazi League organiser and national steward.

After Millwall the BNP bookshop in Welling, Kent came under left-wing scrutiny again. The normal nonsense was churned out about it causing increases in racial attacks. Dubious statistics from suspect sources. Easy to forge, create or manipulate. Data can be easily tampered with. Depends how it's collected.

The Anti-Nazi League (ANL) and various other red groups announced they were going to hold a protest march on the party bookshop. Scheduled for Saturday, October 16th 1993. Expected to be a large demo; 10,000, 20,000? The reds dragged in anyone from the British Isles and elements from the continent as well. They had intended to march past the bookshop in October anyway but the thing that triggered off this larger demo was obviously our recent election result. The ANL wanted to march directly past the shop. This original route the police banned. They could meet at their arranged rendezvous but as they approached Welling they would be diverted.

The police created an exclusion zone around the BNP bookshop that was sealed off from any red intruders. The ANL route started in Plumstead, south-east London and made its way to Welling. Instead of accepting the diversion the police had offered them, once the reds were near the edge of the exclusion zone they began attacking the police. The police were pelted with all manner of objects. Initially the demonstration had started out as relatively peaceful.

However once the ANL and co. were diverted away from the BNP bookshop their murderous intent became obvious!

Their numbers (estimated by neutrals) was between 15,000-25,000. Always hard to tell. Sometimes spectators (and let's face it this was going to be a spectacle!) sometimes get added to demonstration numbers. Just like that other object of intense left-wing fantasy – Cable Street 1936.

I won't spend too much time on this red activity but something I would strongly recommend for the interested reader is this: go on to YouTube/Google Images (videos) and look for the clips on the 'Welling Riot' of October, 1993. Ignore TV commentary and dismiss internet comments underneath. Just watch the utterly demented behaviour of crazed communists attacking the police and the private property of innocent members of the public.

They made several attempts to break through the exclusion zone. This phase went on for around 90 minutes with the riot police and mounted officers repeatedly charging towards the left-wing mob sometimes with the reds ferociously pushing back.

Eventually a stalemate ensued as some marchers lost interest and drifted away. The reds then started to slowly head back towards their starting point in Plumstead, south-east London where they had a pre-arranged rally. They had failed to break through the exclusion zone. They had used bricks, bottles, rocks, placards, smoke bombs any heavy object plus direct physical assaults on the police.

The political left were/are indeed 100% political & cultural schizophrenics! Their mania for universal human equality, their diseased altruism and rejection of socio-biology means they are a true menace to civilisation and natural order.

During the red madness in Welling one individual was arrested with six petrol bombs in a sports bag. En route, back to Plumstead, the marxist mob continued fighting with the police. Some of the hand to hand fighting between the two groups spilled over into neat, suburban gardens watched by terrified residents.

The ANL also removed bricks from a cemetery wall to attack the police with. The police, on this particular occasion, were quite admirable on the day with the way they conducted operations (despite the underhand tactics we had suffered from them since the election victory).

The day's statistics: 74 injured (including 12 police), 11 arrests (!) but we were told many more were to follow. Cost: over £1m and the use of 7,000 officers. Being red should have been a notifiable medical illness. They are truly among nature's abominations. Those of us in the bookshop weren't affected by these events. Metropolitan Police Commissioner, Paul Condon, condemned the rioters saying that a minority had planned trouble in advance. Any experienced police commander would know instinctively that the left had been doing this kind of stuff for decades and it was obvious what was going to happen in Welling in October 1993.

The originally planned demo had been organised months before October 16th,. Condon could have banned it. Public Order Act 1936, Chapter 6, Section 2 1B. Police intelligence plus public statements by leading ANL personnel ('brick by brick') gave a clear indicator what was going to happen.

Overall the whole affair was a victory for the BNP. We win elections. Crazed Marxists attack the police and destroy private property. Even from a neutral point of view, the ANL's 'big day out' idea was one that had badly backfired!

Especially after extensive TV coverage concerning a black police officer (riot squad), a decent soul doing his job who was deliberately singled out by the communist fanatics, called a 'race traitor' (eh?) and badly injured!

Final note on this event. The Metropolitan Police could never allow such a mob to rampage through London's streets in the manner that they did. They, on behalf of the establishment have to maintain some order. If not all kinds of possibilities can occur. The ordinary police at Welling that day did their job. The police officer in charge had this to say though (afterwards) - "..we were not protecting the bookshop..". What exactly did he mean by that?

Interestingly, the red woman who made the 'brick by brick' statement at the beginning of this section was herself injured. The late Julie Waterson, one time ANL organiser and naturally a member of the Socialist Workers' Party. The two groups have a symbiotic relationship (Waterson received a glowing obituary in the Guardian, 2012). Interesting how such groups always had zero interest in the genuine needs of White Working-Class people especially regarding housing.

Waterson was injured and received seven stitches after apparently being hit on the head by a police truncheon. We reap what we sow. Perhaps ill to speak of the dead but she and her friends tried to induce a mob to attack myself and two Nationalist comrades at a magistrates court in east London two days after the Welling riot. The three of us were attending a case which one of us was involved in. The ANL were in the same court supporting their associates who were arrested at Brick Lane market the previous month. The ANL followed their recent tactic of inducing members of the ethnic minorities to assault us while at the same time not prepared to get involved themselves, even though they had at least 50 of their number and there was only three of us. After a brief contretemps – which the police settled – the three of us went home.

Prior to this, for an hour, we received endless verbal abuse from the ANL mob which we treated with mild amusement. Never any vague attempt at serious political dialogue. Just relentless chanting. Miss Waterson herself was a useful text book study of the demented and demonic Marxist. With her harsh accent, porcine features and breath (yes, she was that close) breath, a mix of garlic and old biscuits she proved herself to be the ultimate in female communism and an advert for planned parenthood!

Final events of 1993

After the excitement of September and October in 1993 things quietened down. Derek Beackon attended his first full council meeting in early November. He consistently attended them till the Millwall seat was lost. A tremendous BNP 'Annual Rally' was held in S.W. London. Reds attempted to disrupt it but were outwitted. Richard Edmonds released from prison on December 9th. Good news. Excellent regional rally (December) in Dagenham thus expanding the BNP into the Essex region.

"...hence the saying, 'One can know Victory, and yet not achieve it...'

Sun-Tzu The Art of War

The first three months of 1994 were relatively quiet. Especially compared to the non-stop action of the previous year in particular the month after the Millwall election leading up to the Welling riot. Media interest in the party was still there but not as ongoing as the months of September/October '93.

The TV channels, early in the year, produced some programmes about the BNP and Millwall. They usually focused on one central aspect; if the party gained three seats on the Isle of Dogs under the previously mentioned 'Neighbourhood' system, the BNP would have control over a mini-council deciding housing issues plus a budget of £23 million! The mere thought of this terrified the Establishment. What if it happened and what if it was copied elsewhere in Britain. Regular leafleting and canvassing continued right up until polling day.

The BNP's single councillor, Derek Beackon, fulfilled his public duties and proved to be an excellent representative for the people of Millwall. There was in circulation at the time a well written magazine, a local non-political business publication called Eastside Digest. It was distributed mainly around London's docklands.

In the February 1994 issue, their front page headline was – 'Could the BNP's flag fly on the Island's municipal offices'.They followed this up the next month with this headline – 'Councillor Del showing the way in poll run'. Here is an excerpt from the article accompanying the latter headline:

There are hundreds of voters in the Millwall ward of Tower Hamlets to whom the BNP's first councillor Derek Beackon is a local hero. He listens to their wants, goes away, effects a result and often shows up in the early hours of the morning to supervise work by council workmen. A political rival told 'Digest' - "It's unbelievable. He's putting in a 70 hour week to get himself across and he's succeeding".

-A Nationalist vote is a wasted vote? Never!

Verbal Violence/Physical Violence

Prior to the May 1994 London council elections these two statements were issued be the leaders of the UK's two main opposition parties. Please consider them.

-Paddy Ashdown (Lib Dems) - "..the first priority of every democratic party must be to ensure the BNP is stamped out where it gained a toehold in the Isle of Dogs.."

-John Smith (Labour) - "..we will fight to make sure the BNP is defeated in Tower Hamlets and anywhere else it dares raise its ugly head.."

Virtually the entire London Labour party plus certain Trade Unions campaigned from March to May in one London council ward (division) in order to unseat the BNP. Hundreds of man hours distributing leaflets, canvassing. Assorted actors and 'celebrities' put in regular shifts.Eventually successful (she was elected) Labour candidate Julia Mainwaring had only one message (negative) for the Island voters she met on doorsteps -'Don't vote for the Fascists'. No real exposition of Labour policies. No solution to the housing disputes in Millwall.

Just the same tired message from her, other parties and the media. Their condescending contempt for the White Working-Class was absolute. Unfortunately, it seemed to work. There was a vague feeling our voting power was being steadily eroded.

The two 'masterminds' behind Labour's London campaign were probably two of the most disinterested people in White Working-Class issues that British politics ever threw up: Nick Raynsford M.P. (Greenwich) and the late Frank Dobson M.P. (Holborn & St Pancras). Dobson had been campaigning against the BNP as early as 1988 (when we were not particularly relevant). Obviously saw our potential!

The overt police hostility towards us had cooled since the end of 1993. The MSM kept up their usual mix of lies, censorship and propaganda against us. However as May 1994 approached things took a very sinister twist....

Three serious attacks – culprits never found!

The BNP bookshop had been exceptionally busy since September 1993. Orders for literature, membership enquiries, renewals, donations etc. Extra staff had been drafted in. One of these was Alf Waite an O.A.P. and veteran Nationalist from south London. At the time (spring '94) he was head of party admin. One day (7th April) a parcel arrived at the bookshop, mixed amongst the other, large amounts of mail. Alf Waite attempted to open it and it exploded. Alf was extremely lucky to have only received minor injuries. The parcel had contained a crude explosive device. No one was prosecuted. The sender was a complete mystery.

Soon after this event (23rd April) a new member, BNP activist Michael Davison was canvassing in Newham, east London where he was standing as an election canidate. Michael was with two other BNP activists when they were attacked by a group of men wearing balaclavas and wielding iron bars. They all received injuries but tragically for Michael Davidson he was permanently blinded in one eye. As soon as Michael recovered from his ordeal he was out campaigning again and as we will shortly see he received one of the best votes of the whole BNP campaign coming within a whisker of being elected. A truly brave young man, sheer British guts and determination. Needless to say the culprits were never found or identified.

The BNP's press officer, Michael Newland, who had done fantastic work not only dealing with an avalanche of media enquiries, radio interviews and especially providing valuable technical assistance to Councillor Beackon, had clearly come on to enemy radar!

During the last week of April 1994 Mike (who lived in Camden, north London) had three men knock on the door, saying they were from Camden Council regarding the matter of 'pest control'. Mike was instantly suspicious, didn't let them in and sent them away. Three days later the same three individuals (all white) knocked again but there were no polite preliminaries as they forced their way into Mike's home, savagely beat him, tied him up and broke his hand and having completed their grisly task made a swift exit. They also took some files! Despite his terrible condition Mike managed to drag himself to the front door.

His neighbours saw what had happened, and an ambulance was called. Mike recovered from his ordeal but it would have been a terrifying experience. Again the perpetrators not found despite the BNP even offering a reward. Who carried out these attacks? Cui Bono...

Polling Day - 5th May 1994

The East London Advertiser (the key local paper) had been critical of the BNP during the 1990-1993 period (and let us not forget the phone poll 81%!) but their general reporting of the party had, overall, been fair and objective. Now with so much at stake, politically, their editorial line became openly hostile though nowhere as bad as the Docklands Recorder which made no bones about their detestation of Racial-Nationalism. Yet still no suggestion (from any media) of a fair housing policy or addressing the concerns of the indigenous Whites of inner-London!

"If my ship sails from sight, it doesn't mean my journey ends, it simply means the river bends" **-

A seat lost, electoral credibility won!

Derek Beackon lost his seat. A premonition some of us may have had on victory day September 16th 1993. The two other BNP candidates in Millwall ward also failed to be elected. Nonetheless the BNP performance (for a minority party facing media opprobrium and physical violence) was still impressive. Derek came fourth but increased his vote from 1,480 to 2,041. Remember this is in a council ward in a local authority.

The combined vote of the three BNP candidates in Millwall ward was 28%. The turnout of electors in September '93 was just under 44%. This time turnout (in Millwall) was just under 67%. That is a staggering figure for municipal elections. The high turnout figures were all down to the activities of the BNP. We had made local, Isle of Dogs politics, genuinely interesting.The Labour party (unfortunately) won the three Millwall seats..

Elsewhere in Tower Hamlets Borough we polled well. In the three wards in Bethnal Green the percentages were as follows: Holy Trinity (25%), St James (22%) and St Peters (19.9%). The dramatic increase in BNP votes in these wards all stems from the original Millwall victory in 1993.

Over the border in the other east London borough of Newham similarly excellent results were achieved.

Custom House/Silvertown West – 21.6 %. In Beckton West – 31.3%. In this latter ward one of the candidates was brave Michael Davidson (who had lost an eye after being attacked in the street only two weeks before). Michael Davidson and the other Beckton West candidate, Peter Hart, were only 65 votes and 67 votes respectively from being elected to Newham council. An area that Nationalists hadn't seriously campaigned in for several years!

Nationwide the party put up 29 candidates in 22 wards. Vote percentages varied from 3.8% - 13.9%. That last percentage figure is noteworthy. Outside of Tower Hamlets and Newham it was the best figure obtained. It was in Barking & Dagenham, a portent for the future. In 2006 the BNP elected 12 councillors in that London borough! With rapid demographic change transforming inner-east London the days of 'East London Rights for Whites' were over.

They were effectively over when Derek Beackon lost his seat. East London was lost to us, politically, but the fantastic work of the previous four years had created a strong, capable BNP campaign machine. A professional, party organisation.

Those four years were incredible and as the title of this article announced, proves it can be done.

"Died some, Pro Patria non 'dulce' non 'et décor'..
Walked eye-deep in hell, believing old men's lies,
Then unbelieving came home, home to a lie,
Home to many deceits, home to old lies and new infamy".

Epilogue

The BNP didn't win another council seat until 2002. However in that year they did win three. In Burnley, Lancashire. The result of a superb, intelligent campaign organised by local leader, Steve Smith (no relation).

As previously mentioned the East London 'Rights for Whites' campaign effectively finished in 1994 with the loss of the Millwall seat and the changing, exponential ethnic demographics of the area. The Tower Hamlets branch was never the same again. John Tyndall appointed an organiser (after me) David King, who was an inexperienced political amateur, incompetent and an ideological void. The branch quickly become moribund.

Anyway, most of the strategy and tactics we employed in the 1990-1993 era couldn't be used anymore in east London due to the sudden change in population and the fact that neither myself, Eddy Butler and Derek Beackon were active in the area anymore.

The great political adventure we contributed to and was extremely proud of was over. Time for new ideas and new pastures. We had consistently punched well above our weight.

The architects of that achievement should always be remembered by British Racial-Nationalists: Derek Beackon (of course), Eddy Butler (complex brain but gets results!) and a small, dedicated legion of good activists, good friends – Ken, Vic, Conrad, Barry, Ted, Paul Mc, (young) Vic, Gordon Callow, Alan Smith, Steve Tyler and the great Richard Edmonds. These were the nucleus.

In the now defunct Patriot magazine Eddy Butler writing under the pseudonym Jack Truman made the salient point (without exaggeration) that Tower Hamlets BNP ..."was the branch that single handedly revived British Nationalism..".Without East London 'Rights for Whites', it is honest to say that 1990s British Nationalism would have experienced a political famine almost as bad as the 1980s.

The BNP electoral successes of the period 2002-2009 can be directly traced back to the type of political activities carried out in east London in the early 90s (though there was some valuable work done in south-east London as well).

The election win of September 1993 made the party;

(A). An organisation that doesn't just fights elections but wins them

(B). A nationwide name; instantly recognisable.

Without question by (1993) Britain's premier Racial-Nationalist organisation.

Needless to say this era wasn't entirely without serious problems. The split with our former security team/party stewards who broke away as individuals (and who now called themselves C18 and had became a seperate entity) was unfortunate but inevitable. We (the BNP) were moving away from the methods of the past, we were escaping the political 'ghetto' we had become trapped in during the 80s era. They (C18) had an alternative path that eventually (for those involved) became disastrous and tragic. Some of them were once, good friends. All unnecessary really.

The other problem from that era was the leadership of John Tyndall. My honest appraisal of JT is this; ideologically sound – a solid Racial-Nationalist not just in terms of race, immigration, sovereignty but also in the sphere of economics. He was physically brave (even in late middle-age). Brilliant and consistent writer. Good platform speaker and an even better speaker when performing a tutor role with small groups. Possessed sufficient standing to be on an executive governing body but as the national leader,sad to say, there were deep flaws. This especially applied to individuals he appointed during his time as BNP leader. As well as some of those he tolerated!

The old NF Directorate and 1970s constitution had its faults but it was better than being stuck with one leader, year after year protected by a cast-iron oligarchic constitution! 'Men of Destiny' are extremely rare but such men are so talented they don't require a 'Fuhrerprinzip' set of rules.

Decentralisation of political power should apply to the Nationalist movement with a 'TUC' style body providing guidance (politically & ideologically) while quasi-autonomous branches are the way forward.. such units would apply community-based politics to their chosen area; concentrated leafleting, intense focused canvassing, involvement in local issues, actually meeting the public. In other word; Municipal Nationalism!

The individual who voted for us or bought Nationalist literature can be converted into a member, into an activist, a future election candidate and at the same time infused with Racial-Nationalist principles.

The System/Establishment, very powerful and multi-faceted, seemingly omnipotent, can be politically beaten. Not all in one attempt but in small encounters where we have chosen suitable ground for us (in the manner of Napoleon!) and performed solid work in a selected area. As the title of this essay points out we (realistically) lost the Millwall seat on September 16th, the day it was won. The British state then became obsessional (and dedicated) to getting it back! Apart from the usual dirty tricks (red violence, infiltrators, created political factionalism) plus police pressure and endless salvoes of MSM lies – the entire weight of the Labour movement in London (plus illegal assistance from the Anti-Nazi League) was poured into one tiny area of London. The ethnic vote increased. Floating voters changed sides. Lapsed or lazy Labour voters returned. We lost but paradoxically won also. Spiritual victory?

A small group of brave, dedicated people,with limited resources facing all manner of media opprobrium, legal obstructions, real physical danger, showed, odds can be overcome and victory attained.

Christian (European) Britain is heading towards tribal, cultural and total oblivion. The nation has become heavily balkanised much more so than the former state of Yugoslavia. However a 'crust' is forming. The urban White-Working Class Britons who have continually abandoned London, Birmingham, Leicester, Leeds, etc – are pushed now into various suburban and rural territories. Balkanised Britain. Inner-cities; Brazilanised. The White-flight areas despised by the liberal-left and MSM (even though their policies are responsible for their creation) offer a measure of hope for our future. Maybe 'New Britons' will emerge from an evolutionary bottle-neck and restore the magical quality of these North Sea Islands!

Maybe a future Nationalist (when the readers and this author are long gone) will review our warning messages and ponder why/how we placed ourselves on the brink of total and irreversible destruction.

Then, a pleasing thought. Heroes, yes heroes will return. Not just those of the grand traditional variety of past fame but anonymous ones. Ordinary people. Little people. First in their hundreds, then thousands, then millions. Almost becoming a new 'tribe' and over time recreating and rebuilding what we lost. High ideals and practical strategies can save us and ultimately reinforced by the desperate courage we saw on election night, 1993, saw on the faces of a people, dismissed, degraded, and despised, who still have the faith and will to survive. People like them deserve to win and they will!

"..Eighty percent of the movement's members are first-class, honest to God, British patriots. An Apology from the writer

All thoughout this 4-part series of articles I have promised to provide extensive details about two (apparently) racial attacks from early 1990 that ignited the spark of white resentment (in east London) thus fuelling the 'Rights for Whites' campaign(s). I wanted to examine in full why the savage attacks on John Stoner and Terry Swinney created such fury in Tower Hamlets.As these event are over 30 years ago I needed to dig deep for the correct information. I have trawled through the internet and contacted relevant bodies/institutions(including East London Advertiser) and have been ignored. The Tower Hamlets reference library has been off limits to all for two years due to ridiculous Covid restrictions. In essence I have failed to find out, the full outcomes from a legal perspective, regarding both cases. Without being too paranoid, the subject matter almost seems buried by officialdom. If I attempted to write about the two attacks based on fading memory and hearsay it would be wrong!

As this issue of Candour is going to press I will have to return to this subject later in the year, after extensive and proper research. Sorry for any disappointment but I will find out the full stories.

Stephen Smith (March 2022)

Editor: Absolutely no apologies necessary Stephen. I know from the feedback how interesting our readers, worldwide, have found this series and I have so looked forward to receiving each part. We will include any additional research in the book.

On to the book. Proposed launch is now 2023 which will be the 30th anniversary of Derek Beackon's election as a Councillor on the Isle Of Dogs in London's East End.

In East London Rights for Whites 1990-94 (provisional title) by Stephen Smith we will be adding to the 4 Part series as it has has now appeared in Candour.

Remember we have WON before and we WILL and MUST do so again. It is not our intention in Candour to simply record in sepia a period in history. It is our aim to offer history, education, hope, experience and inspiration to those of all ages brave enough to join our struggle or if already in to continue...

Do not listen to the doom-mongers or those infected with defeatism who say "it is too late to do anything". They surrendered easily enough without even seeing the battlefield and would have others do the same to spare their own blushes and shame.

"What Big Teeth You Have..."

By Tarka

Readers of Candour will be more than aware of the term 'Cultural-Marxism'. This phenomenon arose in the 1920s when the Communist revolution of 1917 failed to materialise beyond the Soviet Union and Mongolia. Marxist thinkers like Antonio Gramsci and Georg Lukas tried to explain why.

Their answer was that culture and beliefs blunted the proletariat's desire to revolt and they came up with the theory of 'cultural hegemony'. In Marxist philosophy 'cultural-hegemony' is the domination of a culturally diverse society by the ruling class which manipulates the culture of that society, the beliefs and explanations, perceptions, values and mores, so that the imposed ruling-class worldview becomes the accepted cultural norm; the universally valid dominant ideology, which justifies the social, political, and economic status quo as natural and inevitable, perpetual and beneficial for every social class, rather than as artificial social constructs that benefit only the ruling class. Therefore to eradicate capitalism, Gramsci argued the solution was that Marxists should carry out a "long march through the institutions the bourgeoisie control", universities, schools, government bureaucracies and the media, so that cultural values could be changed from above. The end of which would be the collapse of Capitalist cultural hegemony, to be supplanted with Marxist cultural hegemony - 'Cultural-Marxism'. Adapting this after World War 2, thinkers of the 'Frankfurt School' decided the key to destroying Capitalism was to mix up Marx with a bit of Freud, since, in their opinion, workers were not only economically oppressed, but made orderly by sexual repression and other social conventions. The problem was not only Capitalism as an economic system, but the family, gender hierarchies and normal sexuality. In short the whole of traditional Western values. The vogue for left-wing theorists like Herbert Marcuse and Theodor Adorno in the 1960s 'Counterculture', culminated with their acolytes' occupation of the commanding heights of the most important cultural institutions, from universities to Hollywood studios.

In the UK this "long march" has taken its toll. We now live in a nation where multiculturalism, multiracilism, miscegenation, homosexuality, etc, is actively promoted. A nation that has an acceptance of 'wards of the state' (those who could not survive without State benefits), drug/alcohol dependency and "Cancel culture" - designed to silence those who disagree with the "new normal". As Nationalists "cancel culture" is something we have always had to cope with, but for others it is a nasty shock. The believers in free speech are warning us about the controlling power of the 'Liberal Elite', 'virtue signallers' and 'snowflakes' orchestrating the unstoppable march of 'woke' and 'cancel culture'. As Brendon O'Neill, the frustrated editor of 'Spiked' exclaimed when Julie Burchill's book on 'cancel culture' had been cancelled "You couldn't make this up". Let's take a look at those names again shall we? Julie Burchill? Didn't she used to write for the New Musical Express, was a member of the Communist Party and has written for, among others, The Daily Telegraph, The Sunday Times and Guardian. Brendon O'Neill? Wasn't he once in the Revolutionary Communist Party (RCP)?

The RCP were formed by Frank Furedi who, with his parents, fled from Hungary after the heroic 1956 uprising was brutally crushed by the Soviet Red Army. At 9 years old he ended up in Canada, and moved to Britain in 1969. Here, he completed his MA and Ph.D at the University of London. As a Sociology lecturer at the University of Kent he broke away from the Revolutionary Communist Group to form the Revolutionary Communist Tendency and in 1981 changed their name to the Revolutionary Communist Party. By this time he was using the surname Richards. This name changing is a strange trait of those who believe working class people are inherently internationalist. The late Socialist Worker Party leader, Yigael Gluckstein, always called himself Tony Cliff. One can only assume that they don't believe in their own propaganda?

Always small, even for a Trotskyite group, the RCP had a newspaper called the next step (no capitals in their egalitarian world), a theoretical journal Confrontation, and then Living Marxism (later LM) which you could buy in W H Smith's and other newsagents. Every year in the summer they held a week long series of all day meetings, entitled "Preparing for Power", and stood in elections. Where their money came from no one ever knew, but after LM was sued for libel by ITN in 2000, to the tune £1 million, they dissolved. Sadly, not for long, as you will find today that they, along with fellow former reds are 'cultural and social influencers' with one ex-RCP member within the highest echelons of the Conservative government.

In 2001 they regrouped as Spiked a British Internet magazine, with the same editor as LM, Brendan O'Neill, and many of the same contributors. Spiked, was funded in part by the Charles Koch Foundation*, and whilst their left-wing opponents dismissed Spiked as right-wing libertarian, Frank Furedi said that LM and Spiked sprung from the tradition of the anti-Stalinist left. Brendan O'Neill identifies himself as a Marxist Libertarian, and has written for, amongst others, The Spectator, New Statesman, BBC News On Line, Guardian blog, Daily Telegraph blog and has a regular column in the Big Issue. All this, along with his television and radio appearances and address to the esteemed Oxford Union Debating Society.

The RCP were very keen supporters of Irish Republicanism (as Spiked still are) and, in 1982, a founder member of the 'Irish Freedom Movement' (IFM). Mick Hume who edited 'the next step', created, and still contributes to, Spiked, recalled that the IFM were accused of complicity in the 1984 bombing of the Conservative Party Conference. Now Spiked are still very keen to play the 'class card', the great divider of the White Race, and attack 'elites', though most of their contributers are University lecturers, writers and media favourites. Mick Hume was born in that well know working class barrio of New Haw, Surrey and after he finished school went to the University of Manchester. From 1999 he wrote for The Times for ten years and was described as "Britain's only Libertarian Marxist newspaper columnist". More recently he has written for The Sun and The Sunday Times. His book There Is No Such Thing As A Free Press - and we need one more than ever was published in October 2012 in response to the 'Leveson Enquiry, and Daniel Finkelstein of The Times descibed it as "a masterclass in the writing of polemic". I'd be interested to know what he thinks of Candour, but I digress.

I would also like to mention Tim Black PhD, editor of the 'spiked review' and contributor to The Independent, La Republica and others; Tom Slater, deputy editor of Spiked. He has written for The Spectator, The Telegraph and is a regular commentator on TV and Radio; Fraser Myers, assistant editor at Spiked, a filmmaker with "1917: Why the Russian Revolution Matters" as one of his credits, and contributor on Sky News, BBC Two and BBC Three. Obviously all down trodden workers, but instead of appearing on 'Rich House, Poor House' for some inexplicable reason they're invited onto political affairs programmes. Others who have contributed to Spiked either with articles or on their Podcasts include: Mail on Sunday journalist Peter Hitchens - ex member International Socialists and Labour Party; Melanie Phillips journalist, author and public commentator - in 1982 she defended the Labour Party at the time of the split with the Social Democratic Party and finally Richard Littlejohn Daily Mail columnist, author and broadcaster, who in the early 1980s was asked to stand as Labour Party candidate. Can you see a pattern emerging? Unfortunately their insidious worming into the establishment doesn't stop there, and I saved the best two until last.

Claire Regina Fox, or since 14 September 2020, The Baroness Fox of Buckley. Not bad for a 2nd generation Irish Catholic who called for the abolition of the House of Lords and was (still is?) a feverant supporter of the IRA. Born in 1960 she studied at Warwick University, where she joined the RCP, and achieved a 2:2 in English and American literature. Fox stayed with her ex-RCP members when they became 'Spiked' and founded 'The Institute of Ideas', after which she became a guest panellist on BBC Radio 4 programme 'The Moral Maze', and appeared on 'Question Time'. In 2005 she supported "Gary Glitter's right to download child porn", something of which she said later, "I feel stupid for saying it. Paedophilia is disgusting". One can only feel she was still in a 'Moral Maze' when she said it. Interestingly Brendon O'Neill wrote a 973 word blog "If You Were Abused By Jimmy Savile, Maybe You Should Keep It To Yourself". I'll let you make your own mind up on that. In 2015, Fox was listed as one of the BBC's '100 Women' a multi-format series that examines the role of women in the 21st century. In 2019 Fox gained first position on the list for the Brexit Party in the North-West England constituency and became an MEP. Don't all shout "opportunist" at once, please!! She stood down as an MEP when we left Europe on 31 January 2020 and, hey presto, became a Member of the House of Lords.

Finally, step forward Munira Mirza. Heard of her? No? She's the second generation Pakistani political advisor of the Number 10 Policy Unit, who previously worked under Boris Johnson as 'Deputy Mayor for Education and Culture', when he was Mayor of London. Mirza is a very clever lady. She was the only pupil in her year at Oldham Sixth Form College to gain a place at Oxford University where she graduated from in 1999. She then completed an MA in Social Research in 2004 and a PhD in Sociology in 2009, both at the University of Kent. Sociology? University of Kent? Yes that's right she met Emeritus Professor of Sociology Frank Furedi and joined the RCP. Many of Mirza's Revolutionary Communist Party colleagues became influential in Conservative Party Eurosceptic circles after the dissolution of their party, while remaining closely associated with each others endeavours. In 2020, ITV political editor Robert Peston said in The Spectator that calls for the BBC's "cultural re-education", which many assumed came from Johnson's former advisor Dominic Cummings, actually came from Mirza and her husband, Dougie Smith, a former senior Conservative party aide and organiser of 'swinger parties'.

What can we conclude from the above? Spiked play the populist card. They sympathise with football supporters booing their teams when the players "take the knee". But they don't reject Black Lives Matter as a Marxist rabble. Their reasoning for "the knee" not being respected is because the white working class are reacting to 'identarian politics'? I can think of a far simpler reason for the reaction of the white working class to "the knee", as I am sure can you. Spiked spend an awful lot of time attacking 'identarian' politics, and I suppose their support for Israel would, at a guess, preclude any sympathy for the identity of the White race. In a Spiked article (dated 24/2/2020) and entitled "Yes, I Am A Race Denier", Brendon O'Neill states "Both the alt-right and the woke left want you to think racially. Refuse. Rebel. Do the right thing: view all people as individuals with agency, autonomy, aspirations and character, regardless of their skin colour, their ethnicity or their heritage". All join in "one class the working class, one race the human race, one solution revolution".

They supported 'Brexit' as did the majority of the 'Marxist' left, the Communist Party of Britain (Marxist-Leninist) believing it will be easier to take over just Britain than battling with the whole of Europe. On the subject of 'gender fluidity' they follow the Communist Party of Great Britain (Marxist-Leninist) line - "We do not advocate and we cannot allow the bourgeoisie to impose this divisive ideology upon us". Bourgeosie? Divisive? What they mean is it gets in the way of the class war. They are anti-environmentalism. Well let's face it the 'reds' have never produced a Walther Darré, Jorian Jenks or Henry Williamson. Spiked rejoiced at the collapse of the 'red wall', and traditional Labour voters moving over to the Conservatives. Many think this can't mean they're Marxists after all can it? Actually it can.

Remember that quote from Lenin - "We (Communists) shall support the Labour Party like the noose supports the condemned man". Spiked are made up of a lot of very well educated, devious people, an elite on "the long march" and, so far, have been very successful.

Like the wolf in Little Red Riding Hood, they have disguised themselves as a well meaning Grandma.

Britons Neglected and our Community Services Get Worse!

By Gordon Stridiron

Some months ago, local Gateshead people in my area were informed... Officially it is called "consultation", that another five public libraries were to be turned over to volunteers and changed into "community hubs," Although in better off middle class areas to an extent this may work in areas such as where I live it is another way of saying goodbye to our local library service.

In earlier days, the more well-to-do could borrow books from a Literary and Philosophical Society and the man in the street could go to the reading room at a Mechanics Institute formed by workers and craftsmen. Some of the Institutes were financed by wealthy industrialists and tradesmen and others by groups of workmen raising subscriptions and building and equipping one brick by brick for themselves. Businessmen William Armstrong and Andrew Carnegie are two who funded public libraries. In Gateshead the North Eastern Railway opened a Literary Institute teaching Science and Art in 1854 and in 1857 the local chemical works a Reading School. A Roman Catholic Reading Room was established in 1858. Some of the early Workingmen's Social Clubs would also provide newspapers and journals for their members.

Although the first public libraries act was in 1850, in the early 1900's many local newsagents would have a penny lending library, as the free public libraries were still few and far between.

As more libraries were built they became an important part of the community. When Gateshead Central Library opened in 1926 with a grant from the Carnegie Trust it was described by a local councillor as "a working man's university", and that is exactly what it was in those days.

When television arrived in most homes in the 1950's it was not only a distraction from the written word, that so stimulated our imaginations, it caused a radical change in family relationships. "Shut up! I'm watching the telly" was often heard in my home and killed many a conversation.

The world of the computer is now with us and they are in every library for those not home connected to the World Wide Web. Yes, the old days of some old Victorian maid saying "Shhhhhh" are long gone. There is 'Rhyme Time' for the toddlers, junior school visits, coffee mornings for the OAP's, book readers clubs, history society meetings and many other community events.

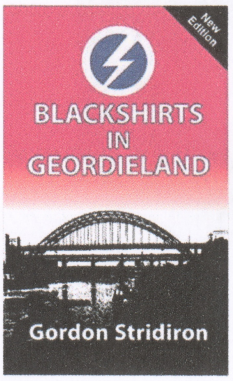
The local library like the local pub, church, community centre and youth club are worth keeping. They link us together for news, activities and companionship. Without them we shall be so much worse off.

Along with the street cleaners, local parks, swimming pools, hospitals, police and fire stations and many Urban and Rural District Councils, the political establishment have decided that local administration centres will go as they claim bigger organisations save money and that's what it is all about.

At the same time, the same people spend tens of millions of pounds of our money on providing a better life for boat people who break our immigration laws, on translation services, 'ethnic' radio and TV channels, on 'Gay Pride' events and propaganda, 'anti-racism' or junky contemporary modern art galleries... the list is endless of those things that are harmful to our own kith, kin, unique culture and language.

As our Council Taxes go up and community services go down it is time to look for a patriotic alternative to protect our way of life and the things we love. If we do not they will continue to be taken from us by the mega-rich and far left crackerjacks who are building a cosmopolitan multi-racial and borderless New World Order that is no good for anyone.

That is NOT conspiracy theory. It is all around us!



Into the ever growing vacuum of knowledge we nationalists must take on the role of local educators and historians.
Gordon Stridiron has done this very well in his own area. See his nationalist best seller Blackshirts in Geordieland.

PERMISSIBLE PATRIOTISM ?

I must not raise my head in pride that I was born a Briton;
To boast my European blood some Ainu might inflame;
My North Atlantic origin escutcheoned shan't be written;
The Western Hemisphere I won't as ethnic cradle claim.
I have espoused the current cult of racial self-detraction -
But as a Mammal I indulge in modest satisfaction.

We Mammals - if I may escape the charge of braggadocio -
As bats, can out-turn any bird; as seals, out-swim the fish,
The elephant excels the boa for dignitas cum otio,
The whale can pulp an octopus with one deft caudal swish.
So when morale is ebbing and my confidence is damn all,
I murmer to my secret soul that I'm a pure-bred Mammal.

No other nationalist publication, worldwide, has the pedigree of Candour. Or our, in the truest sense, blood-line.

See here how blood lines come together.

A few years ago we were approached by the grandson of Lieutenant-Colonel John Creagh Scott, D.S.O., O.B.E. with a view to reprinting Hidden Government. A book by his grandfather published by the Britons Publishing Society between 1954-65 in four editions.

The latest, fifth, edition we are proud to have printed, in 2017.

A.K. Chesterton wrote the following obituary which appeared in Candour #216, 13th December 1957.

"We record with profound regret the death of Lieut-Col. J. Creagh Scott, D.S.O., O.B.E., a member of the Council of Candour.

In the early days, when we had great difficulty in securing sponsors for our movement because most supporters were holding back, "Jock" Creagh Scott, without a moment's hesitation, gave us the use of his name and reputation. His support was absolutely invaluable. As he showed superb physical courage on the battlefields of the First World War, so in the undeclared war in which we are now engaged 'Jock' always displayed a superb moral courage.

Colonel Creagh Scott had many other interests, especially in the West Country, but none was nearer to his heart than the Candour-League of Empire Loyalists movement. He did not always agree with the editor of this journal, but after stating his disagreement he invariably stood by decisions that went against him.

A determined fighter, his place in the leadership of the movement is irreplaceable.

May this most courageous warrior rest in peace."

Amen to that. See how the circle was joined again when the grandson found Candour. See WHY we must survive He is now a very active nationalist broadcaster and will be writing more articles for Candour!

Vic Clarke Veteran Nationalist Dies aged 76

Victor Clarke, popular veteran Nationalist, died last year on the 4th of November 2021, after a long battle with cancer. He was 76. His political activity was exclusively in the London Borough of Tower Hamlets (the old East End). Vic, who spent over two decades in our movement was a National Front* activist and candidate from 1974 to 1986 including two years as the branch organiser.

Vic was also a member of the British National Party* from 1986 to 1994. He stood seven times as a candidate, all for the National Front; General Elections 1979 and 1983. GLC Elections 1981, Tower Hamlets Borough Elections 1978, 1980, 1981 and 1982.

His best vote was in the 1979 General Election where as a Parliamentary candidate he came fourth receiving 1,571 votes (5% of the poll). Universally well-liked Vic was a brave man with an eccentric sense of humour. Twice a widower, he was brilliant at chess and a great authority on the musical works of Richard Wagner.

We shall miss him.

Rest in Peace old comrade.

Stephen Smith

OUT! OUT! OUT!

Thirty summers or so ago Rosine de Bounevialle, (the photo taker) Douggie Pratt and myself went to a huge reenactment of the Battle of Hastings 1066. After the 'battle' your Editor was cheeky enough to borrow some of the enactors kit. The helmet was very heavy. That is real chain mail hanging down on my shoulders. The shield was around 60lbs, maybe more. The shield was handed to me to hold so I only saw the back and only the front when we collected the prints from Boots a week or so later. Interesting design and that wonderful duck egg blue colour.

Happy sunlit days.

We WILL enjoy those again ONLY if we all DEDICATE!

Now, think of how close we are to 2066 and the time we indigenous Britons, as predicted by demographics, become a minority in these jewels in the sea. 1,000 years. NOW is the final chance to form a shield wall capable not only of defence but linked and capable of forcing the enemy back seawards as they spend their hate against solid resistance that has rejected the BBC/MSM and knows a lie when they hear or see it.
